The total shipments of specie from New York since January 1 to May 23, 1868, amounted to $32,947,998. This is nearly double the amount of specie exports dur ing the same period in 1867. It is also largely in excess of the exports during he corresponding time in former years. According to the returns of experts and imports the balance of trade is now in our favor, and is likely to become more ecidedly so when the produce trade set in more actively in the fall. It is to be observed, however, that in the present insettled condition of credit on the other side of the Atlantic, and in conseque of the ease in money on this side, bank ers find it more convenient and profitable to ship specie to provide for bill which otherwise might be allowed to take the general course of trade.
